THE VOLUNTEER REVIEW AT PORTSMOUTE. -The Ball Mall Casette (April 14) says :- As our morning contemporaries each devote some four or fite columns to an account of the volum. toor review at Portsmouth, we may, perhaps, venture to assume that the public has had about enough of the subject for one day. The newspaper descriptions of these affairs have now been reduced to what lawyors call a "commonform." On the occasion of the first visit of the volunteers to Brighton, the Times gave an honest straightforward marrative of the proceedings; but for some reason or other if repented of its candour, and has since set the example of fluttering instead of criticising the volunteers. Everything and everybody are praised all round, and whatever happens in reality, there is never any hitch or short-noming in the ideal picture of the imaginative reporters. One of the stereutyped absurdities of these articles is the boast which is annually made of the number of men carried by rail from one point to another. A moment's reflection, of course, would show that there is really nothing remarkable in the transsetion. Of the doings at Portsmouth yesterday there is no need to say much. Although the programme as finally adjusted was carried out, the previous blundering unmistakably left its mark on the proceedings. The first error of the volunteer officers on the committee was in choosing a "march past" in pre-ference to a shain fight, whom it was declared that the two could not be combined; and the next in retaining that foolish formality in addition to the sham fight when it was discovered that the volunteers insisted upon the latter. The experience of yesterday proved conclusively this notive evolutions are far more attrac-All the best corps used their atmost infinence to escape the much past, and to salist under the decrease and compared with Ports-down-bill, where the fight took place, Southson common, the scene of the march past, was almost described. The volunteer regiments concerned in the latter ceromony certainly failed to gain much credit thereby, for their marching was for the most part loose and slovenly, in marked contrast to the firm and solid lines of the regulars on the ground. Nearly an hour and a half was wasted at the salusing-post, and the result was that a portion of the defending force was rather behind time in joining in the sham fight. The chief feature of the contest the attempt of the enemy to hold the villages of Cosham and Wymering was exceedingly picturesque, and gave the volunteers a very good conception of fighting among streets and houses, though the delighted interest of the sprotators wented comfortably at the windows had rather a ludicrous effect.
